SEPTA plans '14 renewal projects

Doomsday no more. Due to state transportation funding, SEPTA officials can now move forward with plans to update infrastructure and stations around the city and suburbs.

New year has new goals for fully funded SEPTA

Moving forward. The transit group has big plans that include upgrades to bridges, regional lines, trolleys and more.

Four months ago, SEPTA unveiled a doomsday plan that predicted drastically reduced public transit services in coming years, including cutting nine of 13 regional rail lines and converting all trolley lines to bus routes.

But going into 2014, thanks to a state transportation funding bill that met SEPTA's needs, that doomsday scenario will not play out.

"Needless to say, we're thrilled," said SEPTA general manager Joe Casey of the funding. "When you look at the alternative and what our future was facing and what our customers were facing, it was not a pretty picture."

In the doomsday budget scenario announced back in September, cutbacks would have begun early this year if SEPTA was not slated to receive a sizable budget injection.

Instead, SEPTA has a five-year timetable for capital improvements throughout the system, called Catching Up, which was unveiled in late December. One of the first projects to get underway will be replacing the aging bridge timbers at three bridges on the Media/Elwyn line, to prevent the entire line from being shut down.

Quoted

"A lot of critical infrastructure is failing us. The immediate attention will be to those infrastructure problems."
Casey

Further down the road, SEPTA hopes to get started on refurbishing and improving City Hall station, Casey said.

SEPTA will also take over responsibilities for the concourse.

"We want to fix them up, have a huge facelift of those facilities, make people feel safer walking underneath and have it be more aesthetically pleasing," Casey said of the concourse and City Hall stations.

The doomsday scenario was avoided after a $2.3 billion state transportation bill was signed into law by Gov. Tom Corbett in November. An estimated $340 million of those funds will go toward SEPTA's budget.

The transportation package invests about that much money in Pennsylvania's roads and bridges by the fifth year of the plan.

Casey had said in September that SEPTA has a backlog of repairs reaching about $5 billion.

Plans for this year

Renewal projects include:

- Replace rail vehicles: new electric locomotives and Silverliner VI models for use on regional rail lines, and new trolleys.
- Replace/rehabilitate bridges: Media/Elwyn lines, Crum Creek viaduct, Elwyn to Wawa bridge, Norristown High-Speed Line bridges and viaducts.
- Replace/rehabilitate railroad, high-speed line and subway power substations; refurbish transit stations; rehabilitate railroad stations; expand parking.

Weather

Snowstorm with high winds starts tonight

Philadelphia and South Jersey could see between 3 and 7 inches of snow starting this afternoon and into Friday morning, said National Weather Service meteorologist Kristin Kline.

Drifting snow may also be an issue as winds could reach 25 mph, with 35 mph gusts. Wind chill values will be around zero as temperatures will fall rapidly.

Man killed in shooting becomes 247th victim of 2013

An 18-year-old man became the 247th reported homicide in Philadelphia after he was shot and killed at Seventh Street and Girard Avenue in Northern Liberties shortly before midnight on New Year's Eve, officials announced.

The victim was shot once in the head and chest about 11:30 p.m., according to reports, and died at Temple University Hospital.

Police are allegedly searching for multiple suspects.

The homicide marks the last one of 2013, officials also said. The city has had the lowest number of homicides since 1967. Based on police department records, that year there were fewer than 234 homicides. The record high is 500 homicides in 1990.

In 2012, there were 331 reported homicides. That was slightly up from 2011's number of 324, which was also up from 2010's number of 306 homicides.

Homicides were at 302 in 2009 but were way up in the two previous years: There were 331 in 2008 and 391 in 2007. CHRISTINA PACIOLLA

Colorado cannabis

World's first state-licensed marijuana retailers open

The world's first state-licensed retailers legally permitted to sell marijuana for recreational use to the general public opened for business in Colorado on Wednesday with long lines of customers, marking a new chapter in America's drug culture.

Roughly three dozen former medical marijuana dispensaries newly cleared by state regulators to sell pot to consumers who are interested in nothing more than its mind- and mood-altering properties began welcoming customers as early as 8 a.m. MST.

The highly anticipated New Year's Day opening launched an unprecedented commercial cannabis market that Colorado officials expect will ultimately gross $578 million in annual revenues, including $67 million in taxes for the state. REUTERS

Doctors, hospitals expect some confusion with start of Obamacare benefits

Insured. People in most states had to enroll by last week to get coverage that takes effect Jan. 1.

Hospitals and medical practices across the United States braced for confusion and administrative hassles as new insurance plans under President Barack Obama's health care law took effect Wednesday.

More than 2 million people enrolled in private plans offered under the Affordable Care Act, popularly known as Obamacare, during the initial sign-up period for health benefits. Enrollment began in October and lasts through March.

The expanded coverage under the new plans is one of the main parts of the 2010 law, the most sweeping social legislation in 50 years. Over time, the law, which requires most Americans to buy insurance and offers subsidies to help low-income people get covered and sets minimum standards for coverage, aims to dramatically reduce the number of Americans who lack health insurance, which the federal government has estimated at more than 45 million.

After a difficult October launch plagued by problems with HealthCare.gov — the website used to enroll people in coverage — the focus for the government and health care providers turned on Wednesday to what would happen when patients with the new coverage began to seek care. REUTERS

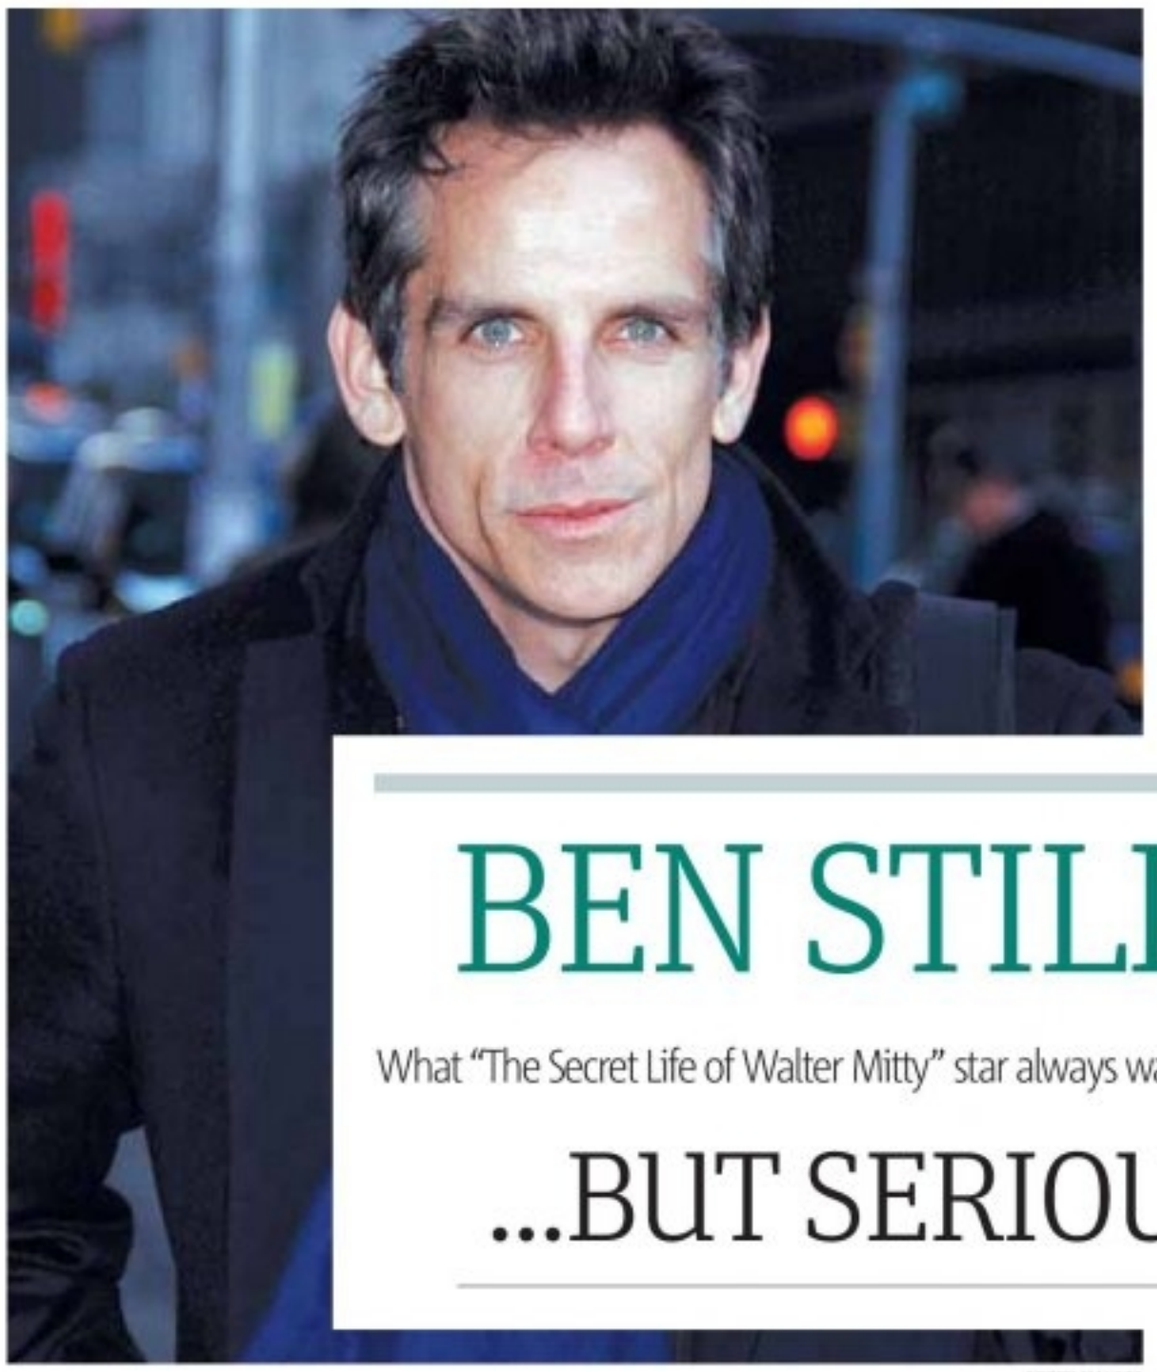
A piece of the old

For the love of paper

"Walter Mitty" also concerns the death of print media, a subject close to Stiller's heart. "I'm of a generation that lived both ends of it," he says. "I'm not against [technology]. It's just sad to me that we're losing those tangible reminders of things that happened.

When we were researching, we went to Life magazine and started looking at old issues. When you look at an old Life magazine, you're looking at something from that year. You feel like you're actually holding a piece of history. Because it was actually there. The fact that that's not going to exist anymore is unfortunate."



Ben Stiller followed in the footsteps of his performer parents, Anne Meara and Jerry Stiller, but he almost didn't. Over his career he's directed five movies, including "Reality Bites," "The Cable Guy," "Zoolander" and "Tropic Thunder." His latest directorial piece, the long-in-the-works update of James Thurber's short story "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty," stars him as a shy daydreamer. It's also a sloppy kiss for analogue formats and print media, with Mitty as a photo archivist at the about-to-be-digitized Life magazine.

BEN STILLER

What "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty" star always wanted to do was direct.

This information is approved by Temple University for public display and is associated with project TIRBXXX

You came onto this project after it had been in production for more than a decade. What was your history with the Thurber story?
I knew the story from when I was in school, then I reread it when I got the script, just to reacquaint myself with it. What struck me was the tone. It's a very simple story and it doesn't really have a plot. But it's so well-written and he just hit on this iconic idea of a daydreamer, and that we all have a lot more inside of us than people can see.

This is the fifth movie you directed, but each one is different. This is more serious than the others. What makes you want to direct something rather than just act in it?
I love movies and I love different genres of movies. It all comes down to what you personally connect with and get excited about and want to see. For me, there's a different connection with each movie. With "The Cable Guy," we were excited about the genre we were trying to satirize. For "Tropic Thunder," it felt very personal in a lot of ways because it was relating to a lot of actor issues. It's about being passionate about something you're going to spend years of your life working on. Making a movie is like a marathon. The decisions and choices you make two years in are as important as the ones you make in the beginning.

Did you always want to be a director?
Yeah. I never wanted to be a comedian ever. [Laughs] It was never one of the things I thought about. I always wanted to be a director since I was 8 or 9 years old.

MATT PRIGGE

Quoted

"Making a movie is like a marathon. The decisions and choices you make two years in are as important as the ones you make in the beginning."
Stiller

Bonus question

The entire movie revolves around a piece of celluloid film. Was it shot on film?
Yes, I had to shoot on film. Karmically, for the movie, it felt right. I love film. I haven't directed in a few years [since 2008's "Tropic Thunder"], but I have never shot digitally as a director. It seems like every time you sit down to shoot a movie digitally, it's like, "Well, how can we make it look like film?" Why don't you just shoot it on film? [Laughs] The film processing is becoming harder to find. But I love the history of the movies, and I love the quality and the texture of film.

Who needs enemies when you have the government?

Regarding the federal judge's insipid and cowardly decision that the NSA's superspying is legal, remember this ONE point: If ANY of our freedoms and liberties is taken away, then the terrorists have won, haven't they? It's not al Qaeda that is killing America. It's our own (very dishonest) government. And if "terrorists" are enemies of America, shouldn't we jail this judge and every government official who violated our Constitution?

After all, even they concede they want to eliminate many of our freedoms, i.e. destroy what America stands for. I agree that's their goal.

Eagles turnaround can be traced to turnovers

NFL. Brandon Boykin leads the charge for a defense that's one of the best at forcing mistakes.

Boykin had an interception return for touchdown two weeks ago against the Bears. / GETTY IMAGES

Last season the Eagles were 4-12. Their turnover differential was dead last in the NFC, at minus-24.

This season, the Eagles are 10-6. They won the NFC East, and they are second in turnover differential at plus-12.

Even though their offense is ranked second in the entire NFC, the simple fact that Nick Foles and company took care of the ball, and that the defense created 31 takeaways, is perhaps the greatest reason for the Eagles' success.

Brandon Boykin is a key reason for the turnover differential. The second-year cornerback has six interceptions in 2013 and two forced fumbles. And his production on the field has made a major impact.

"Just how hard he works in practice and kind of what you see on Sundays is what we see every day in practice," head coach Chip Kelly told the media Wednesday. "That's kind of what we preach around here is that you don't rise to the occasion; you sink to your level of training, and he trains at a very high level every day he's out there and that's evident to us and as a staff. And what you see on Sundays is what we see every day during the week."

Boykin had a pick-six in the dominating win against the Bears in Week 16, and the game-clinching interception against the Cowboys last week.

His ascension to the role of impact cornerback is one the Eagles desperately needed. Prior secondaries have had major problems, with Nnamdi Asomugha and Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie falling well short of expectations.

The Eagles had 19 interceptions this season — led by Boykin with six — after just eight picks all of last season.

Graham headlines elite Saints offense

The Saints come to town Saturday, and a new set of challenges will befall the Eagles secondary, particularly tight end Jimmy Graham.

"I think that's the one thing about Jimmy [Graham] that makes him such a special player is he's probably too athletic for linebackers to cover," Kelly said Wednesday. "But he's too big for defensive backs to cover, and he's never going to be in the same spot. He doesn't line up as a traditional tight end attached to the tackle. He could be the lone receiver; he could be in the back in the backfield."

The Saints will also challenge the Eagles defense with Marques Colston, Robert Meachem, Lance Moore and Darren Sproles. EVAN MACY

Wolff still yet to practice

Safety Earl Wolff has played in just one of the last six games since injuring his knee Nov. 10 against Green Bay and missed practice again Wednesday. "Earl has to practice if he's going to play," Kelly said. "So if that's your question, yeah, he's got to get out there at some point in time."

Manning's record-setting season has people questioning tailback dominance. / GETTY IMAGES

IS THE RUNNING BACK ERA OF FANTASY OVER?

The fantasy world is ready to bail on the running backs.

As we look back on the 2013 season, people are standing on the rooftops shouting that the era of the running back is over. They're pointing to Peyton Manning's historic season, the faceplant of C.J. Spiller and the NFL's rules leading to ridiculous passing statistics.

There's only one problem with this argument. Passing has become so easy in the NFL that nearly everyone can do it. Out of fantasy's top 12 quarterbacks this season, a whopping seven were likely available in the seventh round or later of your draft (Andrew Luck, Andy Dalton, Philip Rivers, Russell Wilson, Tony Romo, Nick Foles and Ben Roethlisberger). Manning won owners a lot of leagues, but those who loaded up early at the more scarce positions and then got one of these seven later brought home the trophy a lot as well. And next year, Manning won't be available in the third or fourth round — he'll likely be the No. 1 overall pick in a lot of formats.

All this brings us back to running backs and the idea of relative value. Yes, it was an awful year for first-round running backs. Spiller, Arian Foster, Ray Rice, Doug Martin and Trent Richardson torpedoed seasons.

But there's just no replacing a guy like Jamaal Charles, LeSean McCoy, Matt Forte or Marshawn Lynch because the dropoff is so steep behind them. Out of fantasy's top 12 running backs, just three (Knowshon Moreno, Fred Jackson, Ryan Mathews) were likely available after the third round of your draft.

So even as the NFL landscape changes, the fantasy strategy is going to stay the same. We win with running back production/depth, and cherry-pick the quarterback spot.

FANTASY

ADAM LEVITAN, LIVING THE FANTASY

METRO'S FANTASY GURU BREAKS IT ALL DOWN.

NFL news

Mike Shanahan certainly has his warts as a coach, but in terms of getting production out of both the running game and his "X" wideout, few are better. So Shanny's firing is bad news for the 2014 fantasy prospects of Alfred Morris and Pierre Garcon. Alf's inability to play in the passing game caps his upside anyway and we can now safely bet that Garcon won't lead the NFL in catches, a feat he achieved with 113 in 2013.

Vick plans to play next year

NFL. The veteran will likely have to catch on with his third career team.

Vick will be 34 when next season starts and hasn't been healthy for a full season since 2006 in Atlanta. / GETTY IMAGES

He wasn't able to beat out Nick Foles this season, but Mike Vick still plans on playing in the NFL next season.

The 33-year-old quarterback told CSNPhilly on Thursday that he hopes to start for a different team next season.

"My skill set is still there, my arm is still there, my legs are still there, I'm still a playmaker, that's evident," Vick said. "I think at some point I'll be playing somewhere."

Where that may be is a question mark, but it seems unlikely it will be in his current location. Vick is a free agent at the end of the season after signing a one-year deal last February.

He was unable to stay healthy in 2013, as he dealt with nagging hamstring injuries. He threw for five touchdowns and three interceptions in six starts.

Bridgewater to declare for NFL Draft

The top quarterback in the upcoming NFL Draft may be all clear for entry.

Louisville quarterback Teddy Bridgewater announced Wednesday he will leave school a year early to declare for the NFL Draft.

Bridgewater is one of the consensus top quarterbacks in the draft after throwing for 3,970 yards and 31 touchdowns in 2013.

The Texans, who draft No. 1, are likely interested in a QB.
